
HIGH VOLTAGE SOFTWARE LAYS OFF A FOURTH OF ITS STAFFERS

High Voltage Software has laid off a fourth of its team. The company, who was behind the hit video game, The Conduit for the Wii console, said the layoffs were a “healthy” move for the company. A representative from High Voltage released the following statement regarding the layoffs: “We are sad to have to say goodbye to these employees and friends, but these changes are necessary to bring our organization to a healthy operational size.” The company will go forward with its plans to develop the sequel to its hit game. They claim that the layoffs will not hinder the development of The Conduit 2. In addition to The Conduit 2, gamers can expect High Voltage to relase a multi-platform title sometime in the future, entitled The Grinder.
