
WHY IS THE JOB MARKET SLOWING DOWN?

The jobs report on Friday concluded a weak job growth for the month of May confronting Wall Street's expectations. The decline in growth is expected because of supply chain interruptions from earthquake in Japan, tornadoes in the South and covering the effect of higher energy costs. In another report compiled by The Conference Board, the Consumer Confidence index fell to its lowest since October.

Read the full article here:
Why the job market stinks

<https://blog.granted.com/>