
MANY COLLEGE GRADUATES GETTING STUCK IN LOW-PAYING SERVICE JOBS

Recent college graduates are having a hard time finding jobs related to their interests, lately defaulting to low-paying service jobs. 53% of the people surveyed who graduated between 2006 and 2010 had full-time jobs, another 14% were back in school. Additionally, the most recent graduates were the most affected, with 40% of them working in bookstores, coffee shops and other positions that don't require a four-year degree. Their biggest concerns are currently related to how they'll pay for food, rent, car insurance, cell phone bills and especially, student loans, paying for a degree they have yet to put to use. Read the full article here: Stunted economy leaves college grads with nothing but low-paying service jobs - Palm Beach Post

<https://blog.granted.com/>