

CONSIDERING 100K JOBS FOR A LUCRATIVE AND STABLE CAREER

There's a reason a lot of parents want their children to become doctors when they grow up – the prestige, the opportunity to do work that helps people and changes lives, and of course, the fact that the profession consistently ranks among the highest paying jobs in the market. Health care is a basic human necessity, so jobs will nearly always be available, especially now that the United States' baby boom population continues to age. If you're considering a career as a physician, then these 100k jobs for professionals in the medical industry may catch your interest.

Surgeons perform invasive medical treatments on patients to remove a diseased tissue or repair a tear or breakage, among other things. Because of the complexity of the human body, surgeons often train in specialties and gain expertise on specific body parts or systems. Cardiovascular surgeons and neurosurgeons are the highest paid of all surgeons. Surgeons can expect an annual salary between $71,462 and $516,641.

An anesthesiologist is a medical professional who specializes in the pain management of surgical patients and other unique cases. He evaluates patients to determine the type, dosage, and delivery of anesthesia to administer. He is also tasked with monitoring its efficacy and making the necessary adjustments during surgical procedures. Anesthesiologists earn $99,156 to $362,422 a year.

Obstetricians treat problems related to women's health, particularly in the diagnosis and treatment of issues concerning the reproductive system. A gynecologist's focus is on pregnancy and childbirth. The functions of these two medical professions often overlap, and doctors who practice in both areas are referred to as OB/GYNs. OB/GYNs can also choose to specialize in different aspects of female care like primary care, fertility, or cancer. The salary for OB/GYNs is, on average, between $60,281 to $271,033 yearly.

You can find job openings for these professions at general job search websites like Granted. These websites are used by companies for whatever type of job they have an opening for: accountant jobs, restaurant jobs, various hospitality jobs and more.
