

MANAGER JOBS IN SAN FRANCISCO, CA: AN AVENUE WORTH EXPLORING

Being home to major technological companies, top health care companies and myriads of other corporations there are many promising manager jobs in San Francisco, CA, than you can think of. Manager jobs provide job seekers with more options than most other occupations. Chances of landing a job as a manager are comparatively high since management jobs are available in virtually every profession. All businesses, big or small, need managers to plan, direct and coordinate the work they do. San Francisco, the fourth largest city in California, with a vibrant and ever-growing business culture is a great place for people looking for employment, especially those looking for manager jobs. The city includes more than 20 Fortune 500 companies. Among these, Hewlett-Packard, Wells Fargo, Oracle and Apple Computer Systems, are great avenues for employment in this wonderfully warm and welcoming city. A perusal of EmploymentCrossing, an all encompassing site for employment openings, will reveal umpteen listings to suit every individual's needs and requirements. Surveys and statistical reports indicate that San Francisco ranks very high on knowledge jobs, the type held by managers, technicians, trained professionals, and educational personnel. The city is also regarded as one of the fastest growing in terms of economic dynamism with new businesses setting shop at a rapid pace, thereby adding more employment opportunities in the region. The reason why managers will always be in demand is because they are needed to manage the people who actually do the work. Managers set goals and targets, show the employees how those targets can be achieved and select the right people to do the work. Furthermore, they monitor the results and analyze them to bring about necessary improvements. Managers also track worker performance to ensure that there is no weak link in the working team or group. Considering that managers plan, direct and coordinate all activities in an organization, they serve as a vital link between the management and its workers. So, their services will always be required. Managers are paid well, but the remuneration will largely depend on the managerial job they perform. An administrative service manager will earn less than an engineering manager. Similarly a computer and information technology manager will take home a larger pay packet than a constructions manager. However, median annual wage for most manager occupations will be in excess of $100,000. San Francisco is a great place to live and has been frequently ranked among the best cities to live in on many counts. Its residents have been ranked as the happiest, healthiest and fittest in America. Given the factors of availability of work, the business culture, and the economic dynamism of the city; San Francisco is a viable option for professionals seeking manager jobs.
