
SOME PART-TIME WORKERS CONTENT WITH FEWER HOURS

Unemployment remains a huge concern, but the underemployment problem isn't as bad as it used to be. The vast majority of part-timers, defined as those who work less than 35 hours a week, are happy with their status. But economists don't have a definitive answer for why more part-timers are content to work fewer hours. Part of it could be that workers who had been looking for full-time work have now decided they prefer the flexibility of a part-time schedule. Read the original article here: Part-time workers: More fine with no full-time job

<https://blog.granted.com/>