

MONTAIGNE'S CREATIVE WRITING PROCESS

The word essay basically refers to any written composition, however, there's a level of flexibility over the term. An essay may consist of some number of written works, which are related in subject, style, and topic. However, the most typical types of essay writing include the essay, the narrative essay, and the personal essay. Although some writing classes still recognize other forms of writing such as the publication, the political essay, and the play, these courses generally believe essay writing to be a particular set of writing, which comprises certain components. Generally, an essay is, in essence, a composed piece that present the writer's view, but the specific definition is somewhat vague, overlapping with that of a story, a poem, an essay, and also a brief story.

Essays generally have historically been categorized as either formal and analytical, or descriptive and private. Formal essays are written for a specific function, often an assignment or even a review. These essays generally need to be based on research and need to be formatted in a specific way to be able to fit the requirements of a teacher. These essays generally take the form of a thesis statement. A thesis statement is a statement by the writer that summarizes his/her argument and provides enough information to support the conclusion. Narrative essays are composed for the purpose of telling a story, usually a short one. They generally contain a description of events and could include a thesis statement in the conclusion. Personal documents are written from the perspective of this author. Such essays provide a more personal view of the person, usually their view on life, values, and personality. A descriptive essay, on the other hand, is composed based on facts and may use a thesis statement at the conclusion.
