Secured loans can be used in a variety of ways. The most common ways to obtain a secured loan is with a car, mortgage or business loan. You see with these three types of secured loans you are being awarded money for the collateral you provide. Let's look at how this will work.

For a business secured loan you must have some form of collateral to get the loan. Most often this is the inventory, building, or equipment that you have for the business. You can only apply for the amount the business is worth. In some cases you may only receive a loan to value of 75 to 95 percent depending on the lending company. If the business is worth 100,000 pounds that is the maximum amount you could get a loan for. Most secured loans for businesses should not be the maximum amount unless you are assured that you can pay off the debt through your business dealings. Business loans tend to be shorter in duration than a home loan.

A home loan or mortgage is another type of secured debt in which you are offering up the property for the loan. The loan to value is currently 75 to 85 percent, with only a few loan companies offering 95 percent. The value of the home and therefore the loan is dependent on the market and the area the home is in. If the homes in your area are going for less than what you are trying to buy a home for then you might not get the loan you want.
