

KRAFT TO CUT JOBS

It looks like Kraft is getting ready to make job cuts in the near future. The company is going to be cutting back on about 90 jobs at its New Ulm facility, which will be enough to qualify as a mass layoff action under the current federal guidelines. For those of you who are not familiar with the idea of a mass layoff action here is a look at how the federal government defines the term, "The Mass Layoff Statistics (MLS) program collects reports on mass layoff actions that result in workers being separated from their jobs. Monthly mass layoff numbers are from establishments which have at least 50 initial claims for unemployment insurance (UI) filed against them during a 5-week period. Extended mass layoff numbers (issued quarterly) are from a subset of such establishments—where private sector nonfarm employers indicate that 50 or more workers were separated from their jobs for at least 31 days." The company has said that the layoffs are going to happen some time in the next year, though the company has not given a specific date for the job cuts as of yet. Though under the terms of a mass layoff action the company must give the workers several weeks of notice before they cut back on the jobs. The company also made job cuts earlier this year, "The management of Kraft foods has announced that they are going to be closing one of their manufacturing facilities. The facility, which is located in the city of Waupaca, Wisconsin, currently employs 200 workers. When the plant closes most of them are going to be put out of a job. The closure of this facility will mean that 120 of the 200 workers, or more than fifty percent of those currently employed, will be looking for work after the closure. The workers were notified of the closure of the facility on Tuesday of this week, so the impacted workers already have an idea of who is going to be getting the boot and who is going to be staying on with the skeleton crew of remaining workers." This is not the first that that we have talked about job closings at Kraft this year. Some of you may recall coverage from late January of this year detailing the loss of more than 1,500 jobs by the company at three different locations. For those of you who did not catch it the first time around here is an excerpt that will get you up to speed in no time at all, "Kraft Foods recently made an announcement that they are going to layoff about 1,600 workers from their North American operations. The layoffs are part of a plan by the corporate management to split the company into two different companies...About 40% of the cuts to the staffing will come from the sales staff in the US and the corporate office. While we do not know the exact date of the layoffs we know that some of the cuts will come to fruition in the next 12 months, as the reorganization comes in to full swing...As part of the changes the company will close facilities in Tarrytown N.Y., East Hanover, N.J., and Glenview, Ill, and move those operating to the Chicago area in the next couple of months. The company will, for the time being, keep its office space in Canada." So as you can see these 120 layoffs announced this week are in addition to these massive layoffs, bringing the total of layoffs for Kraft this year to about 1720, so far. Not exactly an encouraging sign for the remaining workers when you consider that it is only June right now. Update: After a mass layoff announcement, Kraft Foods Group has decided to recruit new employees.
