THE LARGEST COLLECTION OF JOBS ON EARTH

Any good employment interview consists of a dialogue rather than periods in which one party plays the role of inquisitor and the other merely responds. If the session takes on an aura of prosecuting attorney versus defendant, the interviewer either is unskilled or is attempting to conduct a stress interview. If an interview is to serve your needs as well as the interviewer's, it should be conversational, meaning roles should be exchanged whenever doing so will contribute to mutual understanding. However, no matter whether or not the opportunities are evident, there are certain questions that you will need answered in order to make an appropriate decision.
