TEACHER JOBS - MYTHS ABOUT BEING A TEACHER

Students from different backgrounds

The common myth is that teaching is a very easy profession compared to banking or marketing or any other. This sort of an idea can be damaging for a prospective teacher. Teacher jobs are not at all easy as you would be facing students coming from different socio economic backgrounds as well as having different learning abilities. The job is not easy as you could get a teaching job at any place coast to coast or think of relocating where the situation might differ.

Staying updated

It is commonly felt that if you know the subject, teaching is no big deal. It is usually the opposite. You may know the subject, but you cannot bank on the students not having any knowledge. If you are in college education jobs, you might come across some really bright students who spend hours in libraries pouring over different reference materials. Stay updated and polish up your general knowledge as lessons can sometimes stray away from text books.

Being sensitive

You need to be very sensitive when you are teaching preschool students. One slip and you could be charged for being rough with kids. You may be blamed for no reason if you fail to address problems in the right fashion while interacting with parents. There could be frequent complaints if you are not much focused and do not treat all students who come to preschool on an equal footing.

Teaching non-native English speakers

Preschool teacher jobs demand candidates possess these qualities and it is not easy to get a job if you are seen to lack any of them. English teacher jobs are very delicate as you may have to take classes where a majority or a sizable minority could come from families who are not native English speakers. You cannot rush through the lessons and there is a common myth that English teaching is easy.

Fine tuning methods

Not all students may have the same capability to cope with the language. You have to be sensitive about putting in extra effort for some students. Times are tough and you cannot afford to lose a job. To stay on the job and excel in teaching, be more focused and keep an eye for details as well. There could be minor problems in the method that you need to be fine tune regularly depending on the type of students coming to your classes each year.
