

HOW MUCH IS THAT SENATE SEAT IN THE WINDOW?

Want a college diploma? According to my SPAM inbox, you can buy one. How about a position in the nation's most elite legislative body? Yep, you can buy that, too. Or you could until now. . . Today the FBI arrested Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich for offering to more/less "sell" Barack Obama's vacant senate seat for money, a job for him and his wife and other unbelievable shenanigans, including threatening to rescind funding to a Children's Hospital for not giving him cash kickbacks. Classy. Though it was a sad day for government, citizens are finding humor in the situation: some clever jokester listed the Senate Seat for sale on EBay, while others chuckle about the fact that Blagojevich was considering a run for president in 2016. At EmploymentCrossing, we don't joke around when working to find you thousands of job listings (using perfectly legal channels of course) conveniently organized by profession and location. Our researchers may have really dropped the ball by not listing the vacant Senate seat (d'oh!). . . but we hear that there may be a governor's position available soon. . .
