

FULL FORCE FRIDAY

If you're frantically thinking of a last minute theme for your office holiday party (and no, Office fans, "A Night in Morocco" wouldn't be appropriate) . . .how about a sci-fi theme? White elephant gifts shouldn't be a problem. . . At a Los Angeles auction yesterday, a Star Wars fan spent $240,000 to buy Mark Hamill's (read: Luke Skywalker's) REAL light saber prop used in the first two movies in the original "Star Wars" trilogy. Okay, so maybe 240K is lot of moola for a gift exchange that usually includes a 1980s board game with the pieces missing. But just imagine what you could do in your job if you had the protective powers of The Force. You could battle the Galactic Empire troops of unmotivation and negativity. . .or institute the New Jedi Order of organizational change. If these tactics don't work and you still feel compelled to join the Dark Side, try EmploymentCrossing to find a new position that will help you become the Grand Master. Even without a light saber, you can feel The Force tonight as the biggest, brightest full moon of the year pulls the tides even stronger from 18,400 miles closer than usual. See a 'good moon rising' with EmploymentCrossing. . and try our free trial today!
