Summary: If you have ever wondered if job seekers have found employment by applying for unadvertised jobs, then you have come to the right place. We will show you how to find them.

As your job search continues, whether you are unemployed or just looking for something new, there are various ways you can get a leg up on the competition. It is important that you remain ethical in your search for a new job, which is why finding unadvertised jobs is a great way to jumpstart your career. There are thousands of unadvertised jobs on the market today, but not everyone knows how to find them. We will teach you how and where to find unadvertised jobs in this post.

Browse Company Careers Pages

One of the first things you should do is browse the careers page of all the companies you would not mind working for in your career. Put together a file on your browser for the websites of these companies so you have easy access to them. Check the careers pages of all these websites often, at least once per day, so you can catch any new job postings. These are unadvertised jobs because the companies do not have to pay to have these postings published on their own websites.

Attend Awards Ceremonies

Another excellent idea is to read the local paper and look for news about awards ceremonies scheduled to be held in your area. You can also check with the local chamber of commerce for this information. If any of the ceremonies are open to the public, be sure to attend. You will be able to meet and speak with many decision makers of the company since they will be in attendance to hand out or receive some of the awards.

Read Trade Journals

You could also read trade journals from within your industry. You can access these journals online, at your local library or even by subscribing to them so they are sent to your house. Trade journals will be able to help you get in touch with important members of the community. Read between the lines in the articles to determine if jobs are being created in the industry. Contact the author of an article you like to strike up a conversation. He or she might be able to put you in touch with a company that is looking for an employee such as you.

Build a Relationship

An important method to finding unadvertised jobs is building a relationship with someone inside a company for which you would like to work. This can be a family member, a friend, a former co-worker, a former supervisor or anyone else you meet during your career. As you build a professional relationship, this person might decide to contact you when their company is looking for a new employee. This can be a major benefit if the job is never published for the public to see.
